Anthony Chavez represents clients in a wide array of litigation matters in state and federal court and before arbitration panels.

Anthony's litigation practice is diverse and includes assisting clients across a broad spectrum of industries including real estate, construction, agribusiness, apparel, banking, manufacturing, and technology. Drawing from experience gained while attending college in the Silicon Valley and working for a tech company before attending law school, Anthony is adept at e-discovery and employing technology to save costs in litigation. Anthony is also a Certified Information Privacy Professional (CIPP/US) and advises clients on privacy issues.

Anthony is well-situated, from experience he gained growing up in a farming family in the Central Valley, to provide advice and counsel tailored to the specific legal needs of farmers and others in the agribusiness industry.

Experience

- Briefed, argued, and won an appeal to the Eighth Circuit Bankruptcy Appellate Panel for a real estate developer client facing a $25 million loss (the entire development project and millions of dollars of back rent) due to the erroneous interpretation of a commercial lease by the bankruptcy court.
- Reached favorable settlements for apparel companies facing Americans with Disabilities Act lawsuits over alleged barriers to accessing their websites.
- Represented a public agency in multiple lawsuits to recover millions of dollars stolen over decades in a sweeping public corruption scheme.
- Successfully defended a farmer in an agricultural trespass case.
- Managed e-discovery involving terabytes of data for a water district client engaged in a dispute over a decades-old contract.
- Advise companies on responses to potential data breaches.
- Advise companies on compliance with Prop 65.
